Alumnus wants Fuller idea applied to riots

By Marc Chase
DE Editor-in-Chief

When an SIUC alumnus went to England to facilitate a discussion last year to ease tensions between Palestinians and Israelis in the Middle East, he said bringing a variety of views to the event was key.

Now, Cornelius Crane, a 1995 SIUC graduate, says that same diversity of ideas is needed in Carbondale to solve problems that have led to Halloween riots.

Crane was asked by Team Syntegrity of Toronto, Canada, in fall 1995 to lead a Syntegration, a discussion method based in part on the teachings of former SIUC Professor R. Buckminster Fuller, between the two Middle Eastern groups. Team Syntegrity is a corporation that leads Syntegrations throughout the world.

Crane has participated in and has helped lead several Syntegrations, including one at SIUC. He said social problems like the Carbondale riots in 1994 and riots that took place Oct. 26 and Oct. 27 can be avoided if people utilize discussion groups such as Syntegrations.

Crane went to Europe attempting to help ease tension between Palestinian and Israeli populations regarding settlements in the occupied territories.

He facilitated the discussion between the Israelis and the Palestinians — both of which have a long history of violent feuds concerning settlement rights and religious differences — using a method called Syntegrity.

"We brought in 15 people from one side and 15 people from the other side, and we had a variety of all kinds of people," Crane said. "We had people who were extreme orthodox Jews, and we had intellectuals, rich industrialists and diplomats — all who had their own side to tell."

"By the end of the meeting, the ideas that were created were so powerful about ending the conflict... Carbondale really could use something like this to come up with solutions to its problems."

Crane said he and Bill Perk, a retired SIUC lecturer in community development who once studied under Fuller, want to bring a Syntegration to Carbondale.

"We need something to stop the riots in our little town," Crane said. "As adults, we can sit down and find a solution, but all different types of people need to work together where all people have an equal say. That is what a Syntegration is all about."

Syntegrations involve a group of about 30 people who should come together during at least a three-day period, Crane said. The participants usually are chosen by representatives of different groups, which could include the police, SIUC administrators, students, business owners and Carbondale citizens.

Crane said based on one main topic — ending the tensions that lead to Halloween riots — the participants will decide on 12 sub-topic discussion groups. Each of the 30 participants will directly discuss two topics and will critique two other topic discussions. By doing this, all participants are exposed to every idea that is generated by the Syntegration.

"The important thing that makes Syntegrations effective is that there is no predetermined outcome," Crane said. "There has been a problem in the past between students and the city because one group has already determined how things are going to be done."

"This opens the door for all kinds of possibilities because it is the participants themselves who all decide what will be discussed and what possible solutions will be. There is no hierarchy; everybody is on an equal level."

The method follows a framework created by Stafford Beer, a famous philosopher and scientist, and combines solving humans problems with Fuller's Synergetic geometry and Cybernetics, the science of effective

Carbondale and SIUC officials should "look to home" — or to the teachings of a former SIUC educator — when attempting to develop solutions to prevent future Halloween riots in Carbondale, one City Council member says.

Councilwoman Margaret Flanagan said using a problem solving method developed in part by former SIUC professor and renowned future planner R. Buckminster Fuller is something she would advocate to the council.

The method, known as Syntegration, is partially based on Fuller's idea of Synergetic geometry.

It is a means of bringing 30 people together who represent all groups in the community to discuss problems and develop solutions.

SIUC alumnus Cornelius Crane and retired lecturer Bill Perk, both scholars of Fuller's work, are trying to organize a Syntegration in Carbondale to help ease

Each ball represents a topic decided upon by a sub-group of five people.

The icosahedron, on which Syntegrations are based, is one of the sturdiest and most common structures in nature.

Faculty members go to polls for unionization

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Union organizers and University administrators will be holding their breath today as SIUC's faculty members cast their votes on collective bargaining.

One thing both union and University officials agree on is that all of the about 700 tenure and tenure-track faculty who are eligible to vote in the election should do so.

The polling place is open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom A.

"Regardless of the election results, everyone will be more satisfied with a decision made by all of the eligible voters than one made by a small percentage," Bill Capie, vice chancellor for administration, said.

All faculty holding tenure or a tenure-track appointment of full time or greater are eligible to vote with the exception of law and medical school faculty, deans, department chairs, directors, short-term faculty, managerial faculty and faculty employed through other campuses, according to Illinois Education Labor Relations Board guidelines.

The Illinois Education Association/National Education Association union election became a reality after more than the required 30 percent of signature cards sent out to all eligible faculty last summer were returned. James Sullivan, SIUC IEA/NEA chapter president, said.

"The University, the students and the taxpayers who support this institution will be better served by a faculty that has co-equal status in the decision making that determines that values and mission of the University," Sullivan said.

Sullivan said if the election goes in favor of collective bargaining, IEA/NEA will be authorized to represent the SIUC faculty in all negotiations with the University in matters of contracts, terms and conditions of employment.

SIU President Ted Sanders said today's election is a historic moment for the University and stressed the importance of all eligible faculty casting their vote.

"It (the election) will determine whether we continue with a shared governance model or move to a labor-managed model," Sanders said.

Sullivan said students should not be concerned about instructors going on strike because collective bargaining offers a variety of methods for faculty to negotiate with administrators.

"Students have to worry about a strike about as much as they have to worry about a meteor falling out of the sky and hitting them on the head," he said.

SIUC Chancellor Don Beggs said he wants all eligible faculty to vote.

"I want people to vote to declare what they want," Beggs said.

"I'm not eligible to vote. I just want to have the kind of working relationship that the majority wants, so it is important to make sure that a majority votes."

The last time a faculty election on collective bargaining took place was 1988.

At that time, Sullivan said about 42 percent of the SIUC faculty voted in favor of the union.

ACCURACY DESK

In the story "Bringing Heritage to Life," in Monday's Daily Egyptian, the attendance was incorrectly reported. A total of 288 attended the three sessions of the event.

In Wednesday's DE article, "Mall shop to pay for center's move," there was some misleading information.

First, Science Center museum volunteers will volunteer in the gift store in the University Mall. Also, in the quote, "Mom and Dad will be able to drop Junior off while they do their Christmas shopping," the information was misleading because the store is not a daycare center for children of mall shoppers.

The DE regrets the errors.

BOT expects to address Halloween, renovations

The SIU Board of Trustees is meeting today at the SIUE University Center in Edwardsville.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs and SIU President Ted Sarvers are expected to address the board regarding SIUC's position and response to the rioting that occurred in Carbondale the weekend prior to Halloween.

Other business the board is scheduled to address includes renovations to Boomer Hall in University Park, Lindgren Hall and the Student Center, and the proposal for a year-long celebration of the 50th anniversary of the beginning of the SIU President Delyte W. Morris' era.

Fire totals student car parked on campus lot

A car belonging to an SIUC student was discovered ablaze in lot 4, just south of the Communications Building, by a University Police officer at 9:59 a.m. Wednesday.

The Carbondale Fire Department responded and extinguished the blaze, but not before the 1984 Audi was totaled.

Three adjacently parked vehicles were damaged.

The totaled car belongs to John A. Franks, 24, a senior in biological science from Murphysboro.

The names of the owners of the other three damaged vehicles had not been released as of press time Wednesday.

Police said the damage to Frank's car was about $3,000, and the total damage to the other vehicles was about $2,600.

Fire Department Officials said they do not suspect foul play but believe the fire may have been caused by an electrical short in the Audi's fan motor.

Gonzalo Tomas never thought college was in his future until members of the SIUC Hispanic Student Council spoke at his school and encouraged him to continue his education.

"I did not plan on going to college until today," Tomas, a high school senior at the Cobden school district, said. "I did not know there are so many Latinos in college to help others out."

A group of about 10 students from the Hispanic Student Council visited Cobden School Tuesday to speak to Latino students about the need to stay in school and seek a college degree.

The presentation was part of community service projects some members of the Hispanic Student Council are doing to get SIUC chapters of the Hispanic fraternity Sigma Lambda Beta and the sorority Sigma Lambda Gamma.

Tomas said he was not planning to go to college because of the low number of Hispanics at higher learning institutions.

"I was afraid I would be there by myself, and there would be nobody to help me," Tomas said. "Now I know there are many Latinos in college promoting our culture."

Tomas and a group of about 50 junior high and high school students listened as the SIUC students spoke about staying in school and looking ahead to college.

ELECTION '96

Brown to file petitions for ballot recount

By Christopher Miller
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Barbara Brown, former Democratic candidate in the 58th District State Senate race, says she has asked for a recount of the votes because of the closeness of the election and circumstances involving hand-counted ballots.

Brown, who lost to state Sen. David Luechtefeld, R-Okawville, by 127 votes, said her campaign has initiated a discovery recount to clarify the results of the race.

"It was such a close race," she said. "I think people deserve to know what the numbers are."

Steve Pittman, Brown's campaign manager, said the recount can begin once the Brown campaign files a petition with each of the seven county clerks in the district. He said it is then up to the clerks to schedule the actual recount.

A discovery recount is a fact-gathering process that involves recounting the ballots from 25 percent of precincts in the district. Brown said if a discrepancy appears between the discovery recount and the original results, her campaign would then consider a formal recount.

To qualify for a recount, the losing candidate in an election must have received at least 95 percent as many votes as the winner did.

In the election, Brown received 99.7 percent as many votes as Luechtefeld. Luechtefeld won with

Students who are suspended should have second chance

AS THE POLICE AND UNIVERSITY OFFICIALS have scrutinized pictures and video tapes of the Halloween riots, some students have been notified that they will have to appear in front of a preliminary hearing. So far, two SIUC students have admitted their guilt concerning the riots, at these fact-finding hearings, and they were given a punishment fitting the crime. There are still more than 30 other students who are now waiting for their hearings. The preliminary hearings are to determine if there is enough evidence to warrant a trial, and if that happens, some students may face a stiff penalty for one night of drunken partying.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs assured everyone on Oct. 29 that those found guilty will face possible suspension from the University. That was a very good promise, as people want those who caused major damage to businesses on the Strip to pay some kind of price. Suspension from the University would be that price. But what happens then? If a student who is found guilty is suspended, does that student deserve a second chance at a college education? Although many people want to get "those" types of students out of the city, everyone deserves a second chance — especially when it comes to education.

There is no denying the fact that justice must be served. The people who were responsible for breaking windows and vandalizing the city need to be punished. Whether that punishment comes in the form of probation, fines and, if deemed necessary, suspension, the students need to be sent a message that the behavior they displayed will not be tolerated.

Once that price has been paid though, there should come a time when the students should have a chance to make up for what they did. That means that if the University feels a student should be suspended, the school also should give that student an option of wiping the proverbial slate clean. And the University should make all options clear to the students who are punished.

SOME PEOPLE MAY THINK THAT SUSPENSION is too stiff of a sentence for people found guilty of breaking a window, but actually, suspension may be the best solution for some of the students. By telling students they have to leave school for a semester or two, it sends a message to them that they are going to have to take responsibility for their actions. That responsibility may come in the form of getting an apartment and working or going home to live with their parents and enrolling in junior college. It may be a difficult period for those students, but it may also teach them a very important lesson. They may realize how important a college education is.

If a student is forced to work at some kind of menial job because he or she could not find anything better, then it may start to sink in how much he or she needs a degree. Some people living with their parents may begin to realize that they need a way out and that a college education is somewhat essential for their future.

The upcoming students who face preliminary hearings and trials are going to have to do a lot of thinking about their future. For some who get suspended, it may not be that important. But for others who took part in the riots simply because they were new to college and became overwhelmed, they may find it a very difficult period. They may realize that they want to come back because they need an education. They may actually learn a lesson in all of this, and if they do, then their debt will have been paid.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Partying wrong priority

I read with interest the Op/Ed column by Jeff Howard in the Nov. 8 Daily Egyptian and agree with him 100 percent. Because of the University's current liberal admissions and retention policy, it should expect that there will be a large number of students who would rather party than study and an equal number that will have a difficult time finding jobs after they graduate. There also will be an increasing trend for faculty members to retire early.

James H. Swisher
emeritus professor

Rioters owe restitution

During the pre-Halloween riot, a number of windows at the Newman Center were broken, the center's sign was vandalized, a picnic table was destroyed, and a window at a nearby house was broken. A recent letter to the Daily Egyptian from Newman Center Director John Scarano put the cost of repairing the damages at more than $1,500. In fact, the final figure is closer to $2,000. Damage also was done to the Wesley Center and the Interfaith Center.

Rioters who were interviewed expressed anger at the city of Carbondale over bar-entry age limits, bar closures and so forth. The riot was wrong. And, obviously, a riot is not a good way to convince Carbondale to change its ordinances. Businesses and religious centers were the victims of the riot, and they had nothing to do with the decisions many student find disagreeable. It is particularly difficult to justify damage to the non-profit religious institutions, which exist to serve students.

As someone who attends services at the Newman Center, I know the center's finances are very tight. Therefore, I make a simple challenge to the consciences of those who participated in the riot. If you were one of the rather small number of people who actually tossed a rock at a Newman Center window, damaged the sign or broke the picnic table, I ask you to make restitution. I suggest a contribution of $100 to the Newman Center. This can be done anonymously; by mail, by bringing it by the Newman Center (the secretary won't know you) or even by dropping it into the collection on Sunday morning (the service is at 11 a.m. and only takes an hour). I am sure other institutions and businesses also damaged by the riot would accept restitution.

If you are willing to fight for your right to party, you certainly ought to be willing to pay for your party.

adjunct assistant professor,
microbiology

People must prepare when voting

Voters in Carbondale's 25th precinct invigorated my faith in the United States' future.

I judged the precinct, distributing ballots to 377 voters, all of them SIUC students. That's only 41.5 percent of its registered voters — below the national average — but it was three times greater than my colleague saw in the nine years she has judged the precinct.

Many waited to vote for the first time in a line that occasionally stretched out the door. Their numbers exceeded our supply of a form that had to be completed if they had recently moved. All but a handful waited for the authorities. Some waited for more than an hour! My peers' compulsion to vote gave me greater pride than any concern I had that they might not vote for my choice of candidates. Their determination was remarkable.

Unfortunately, the precinct's turnout would have been more respectable if ballots were not denied to a surprising number of voters. These "wanta"-voters thought their efforts were commendable. Some even scorned citizens who were too lazy to vote. But they were blind of their own failures to assume all of the responsibilities that are attached to their right to vote.

"Wanta"-voters came to us from all over. Many had not voted for years and had moved a time or two. They were ignorant of the fact that they could not vote anytime or anywhere they pleased. A man registered in Indiana did not understand why he could not vote in the 25th precinct of Carbondale. Another loudly charged us with "discrimination" when we did not let his friend vote because she moved away too long ago. Irresponsibility is the only excuse "wanta"-voters have for not voting. It is pitiful that they do not value the right to vote with the same selfishness with which they guard their personal possessions. Get selfish if you are a "wanta"-voter! Cherish your right to vote and make any efforts that are needed to retain it. That demands a conscious effort. Get ready for the next election.

Those of you who voted in the 25th precinct of Carbondale make me very proud. Our country's future might just brighten if others follow your example.

Ugly Westerners despoil again

When I first arrived 15 years ago in Bukavu, an African city situated on the magnificent Lake Kivu in eastern Zaire, I immediately harbored mixed feelings about my presence.

I had come to Bukavu for seven weeks to enhance my paltry French, which would be the means of communication at my future Peace Corps post in Cameroon, another African country. While language-learning in Bukavu seemed harmless enough, I always wrestled with the murky issue of what purpose hordes of Westerners really served in exotic locales like Bukavu.

Today, Bukavu and other sites around Lake Kivu are experiencing great upheaval. Ethnic groups in the region are battling each other, with no end in sight to the fighting. Americans and other Westerners can read all about this tragedy and smugly blame it on the intractable attitudes of those Africans.

If only it were so simple.

For almost 40 years now, numerous Westerners, including Americans, Belgians, English, French and Germans, have inhabited Bukavu, Bujumbura, Goma, Kigali and other sites involved in the present conflict. Stated intentions of those Westerners may have appeared admirable: Let's help the undeveloped and impoverished residents of this area improve their lives.

Good intentions, however, have failed to satisfy actual needs.

Ever present consultants lectured locals about new methods of agricultural and industrial production, whether suitable for the region or not. Peace Corps Volunteers and their equivalents from other countries taught science, mathematics and other subjects, without linking that knowledge to concrete and practical goals.

Frequently frustrated by their failure to improve social conditions, many Westerners developed a more pragmatic view of what they could accomplish. A reverse process

by Robert McCormick

began in translating Western largess into substantive benefits. In many cases, it was not the locals who benefited from foreign assistance; it was the foreigners themselves.

Aid workers often collected large salaries with substantial rewards for deprivations suffered by living in a place like Bukavu, which is a truly beautiful site. A donor country, like the United States, also reaped benefits by allocating foreign aid to purchases of goods from the donor country. The sight of cumbersome American trucks mired in rugged African terrain never made much sense except in the accounts of the United States manufacturer.

At times, foreign aid propped up local elites, who were then expected to follow the party line of the donor country. Usually this required the host country to open its doors to Western businesses, which could then profit from these new markets.

The Western presence in the Lake Kivu region created a sense of privilege. The mere fact that I was from the great land of America meant residents would offer me gifts and other items in recognition of my elevated, but contrived, status.

Many locals, though, felt resentment toward this favored position of Westerners. For instance, one young man expressed contempt that all good tennis shoes went to the West for sale there, while Africans could buy only second-rate products.

For all the efforts of hundreds of Westerners, no apparent success has resulted in constructing a stable, multi-ethnic society in the tormented area around Lake Kivu. From a Western viewpoint it would be easy to slot Bukavu and its environs into the too-hard basket and simply forget about this area. That might even be an ethical option if Westerners had not already massively intervened there.

Recent events occurring in Zaire, Burundi and Rwanda need to be viewed in connection with the Western presence. Without that presence, it is difficult to imagine that the situation could be as horrific as it is now. Tribal rivalries in this region existed before Westerners arrived. But not until Western intervention has the carnage been so widespread and profound.

By ensconcing themselves around Lake Kivu with little regard for regional attitudes and conditions, Westerners have found it difficult to improve significantly the lives of local residents. Instead, our weaponry, cynical politics and vulture-like business practices have provided even more fertile ground for conflict than had we never descended upon the peoples of this region.

Distrust of Westerners may hinder any significant involvement in negotiating peace among warring factions. However, the West must demonstrate that it wants to build a constructive, genuine and non-partisan alliance with the region.

No matter how treacherous the existing situation at Lake Kivu appears, the United States and other western countries have an obligation to assist in repairing the damage.

By Zack Pierceall
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC photography professor wants his students to be exposed to some of Southern Illinois' small towns, so he assigned them to document life there.

Daniel Overturf, a cinema and photography professor, said the course project grew out of some of the work he has done with small towns.

"The idea is there's a reduction of population in these towns," he said.

"What you're seeing in the photos is the feel and look of towns experiencing this."

Li-Ju Chen, a sophomore in photography from Taiwan, said the project helped her learn about the cultural differences between the United States and Taiwan.

Chen is photographing Murphysboro.

"I didn't know about Halloween or trick-or-treating until I started to do this project," she said.

Overturf said this is the first time he decided to develop the idea into a 16-week class project for the C & P 470C Small Town Documentary course.

The seven students must turn in a portfolio of their work for the class and give photographs to the town they are documenting.

"They've had to contact officials and let them know that they're going to be out there taking photographs," Overturf said. "Also, they've had to make themselves accessible to the towns — documenting festivals and activities there."

Susan Grigalunas, a graduate student from Peacedale, R.I., said she has been well received in the towns.

"Everyone has been really open and friendly," she said. "One woman even drove me around for two hours."

Grigalunas is documenting Gorham, Jacob and Neunert, for her project. She said she chose these towns because they are river towns, and she thinks living near water has an effect on people's lives.

"I saw the flood of '93 on TV, but living where I do, the stories were abstract," she said. "Now I can attach people to those stories."

Randall Frake, a senior in photography from Crystal Lake, said the assignment is different because it requires him to interact with people.

"This project forces students to confront other people, instead of just photographing landscapes and buildings," he said. "I've really enjoyed it. I hope to continue taking pictures of Vienna next semester, even though it won't be an assignment."

Some of the students grew up in large cities, including Rob O'Neil, a graduate student in photography originally from Akron, Ohio, population 300,000.

He said from the project of documenting De Soto, population 1,589, he has gained a sense of community.

"I knew about some of the small towns around [Akron], but I'd never really gotten into it until now," he said.

Overturf said he was pleased with the work he has seen.

Some of the photographs the students have taken are on display in the Communications Building, near the Cinema and Photography Department.

Overturf said the students have completed about three-fourths of their work.

"I'm really happy in terms of the work I've seen," he said. "The students have to drive to their towns once or twice a week to take these pictures. The students have to be very self-motivated to work on these projects."

Real TV violence excessive

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD—Twenty years ago, the movie "Network" satirized television by depicting programs featuring on-air murders and prime-time psychics. Based on recent trends, some people wonder if that fictional past has become our present.

Several programs relying on real video footage of death and destruction — among them the Fox specials "When Disaster Strikes" and "When Animals Attack" — have prompted some discussion within the TV industry about boundaries of taste. What may be more telling, however, is that viewers don't appear overly concerned, registering few complaints and watching such shows in big numbers.

Indeed, both Fox specials drew extremely good ratings; the latter setting the network's record for any non-sports program in the 7 p.m. Sunday hour. Similarly, CBS did inordinately well with two installments of "World's Most Dangerous Animals" (a third is awaiting an air-date), while one of the few new shows making waves in syndication is the video-compilation program "Real TV."

Discussion

organization.

A Syntegration discussion is based on the icosahedron, a 20-sided shape that was the basis for Fuller's famous geodesic dome on which the design for Disney World's Epcot Center is based.

Both Crane and Perk said they have seen startling results from Syntegrations.

"At the end of the discussion in England, we had Palestinian's and Israelis hugging each other and crying," Crane said. "Both sides truly wanted to find a way to get along and make it work for their children." Perk said if the right variety of people would be brought together in Carbondale, he believes a common ground could be met.

"We need to involve all kinds of people in this — police, students and even some of those who were arrested in the riots," Perk said. "If you get one of the arrested people and the chief of police together, there is a good chance they will come out of a Syntegration as buddies."

Perk has been in contact with at least one member of Carbondale's City Council, and he said he hopes he can get both the city and the University involved in making the Syntegration a reality.

Perk also has facilitated other Syntegrations, including one at SIUE, in which Illinois House Rep. Wyyetter Younge, D-East St. Louis, participated.

Younge said Syntegrations can be a valuable tool in democracy.

"I am very enthusiastic about the technique because it can be used to reach a common ground between many different groups," Younge, who has participated in three Syntegrations, one involving wealth generation, said.

"I'm glad to hear that Mr. Crane and Mr. Perk are trying to bring one to Carbondale. Syntegrations really help show who the stake holders in an issue are, and all opinions are heard."

tensions that have led to past riots in the city and on SIUC's campus.

"And I think it's a wonderful idea," Flanagan, who studied under Perk when she was a student at SIUC, said. "I know the process of Syntegration, and it is very worthwhile."

Flanagan said she views Fuller as a man who was a brilliant thinker who had a knack for creating designs for the future.

"He was very much into design in the physical and the social sense," Flanagan said. "If we have a retired faculty member (Perk) who wants to help Carbondale with a Syntegration, I think we should do it. I certainly would support that on the council."

And two other SIUC graduates, who were student leaders when they attended the University, also advocate Syntegration.

Bill and Susan Hall, both 1995 graduates of SIUC, participated in a Syntegration when they were students at the University. They both said the method could help develop solutions to Carbondale's Halloween riot problem.

Bill Hall, former SIUC Student Trustee and a former Undergraduate Student Government president, said the method has the potential to succeed for the same reason that other attempts at alleviating riot tensions have failed:

"In past task force's on the issue, a diversity of ideas was not present in drafting solutions," Bill Hall said. "Past task forces have been poisoned the outcome because it was just a bunch of officials, with little or no student representation, that already knew what they wanted the outcome to be."

In Syntegrations, there is no predetermined outcome and all people in the discussion have equal say in drafting solutions, he said.

"It's very democratic," Susan Hall, who served as Graduate and Professional Student Council president when she was at SIUC, said. "Other methods, like public hearings, can be very intimidating to people because they don't want to stand up in front of bunch of strangers to speak their mind."

"Syntegrations create an environment that is a welcoming type of forum where what everybody says and thinks is important." While the Halls and Flanagan are enthusiastic about using a Syntegration as a possible solution to tensions that have led to riots in Carbondale, other city and University officials said they are not sure if the method is best for the city and campus.

"I think we (city officials) are open to whatever it takes to solve the problem," Carbondale City Manager Jeff Doherty said. "But I can't comment on the particular process (Syntegration) because I do not know anything about it yet."

And SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said the University already is looking within itself in an attempt to develop solutions.

"I have had interactions with Bill (Perk) in the past, and I don't disrespect the idea of Syntegration," Beggs said. "There are several groups on campus that would like to use group problem solving to help with the issue."

"I am more inclined to look within the University in terms of our ability to address the question. I believe SIUC already has several types of expertise available."

But regardless of the method used in developing solutions to Carbondale's riot problem, all agreed that the entire community needs to come together and offer input on ending the violence and property damage that riots create.

"Bridges need to be built between all groups within the community," Susan Hall said.

Son Volt: a bunch of country punks

By ALAN SCHNEPP

Back in the winter of 1988, a band named Uncle Tupelo visited Carbondale on a Tuesday night to play a gig at Hangar 9 on the Strip. It wasn't a very successful show, and the band never played there again.

"God, I can barely remember the show," the band's former drummer Mike Heidorn said. "School probably wasn't even in session. I know nobody showed up."

Although the tiny Carbondale crowd was unresponsive to Uncle Tupelo that night, the rest of the world wasn't. The Belleville-based trio released its debut LP, "No Depression," in 1991, and critics went wild. The album intertwined crunching, punk power chords, a la Husker D.D., with traditional folk and country.

Unlike other country-punk acts, however, Uncle Tupelo paid a reverent tribute to country music's roots instead of infusing a little twang into punk songs for humor's sake. Uncle Tupelo was perhaps the first band to cover songs by the Carter Family and play a raucous tribute to late Minutemen vocalist D. Boon.

The trio released three more critically acclaimed albums before chief songwriters Jay Farrar and Jeff Tweedy ran into musical differences and broke up the band in 1994, leaving a cult-like fan base shocked and disappointed. The band is often credited for sparking the "traditional country is cool" movement that has spawned acts like the Jayhawks and Gillian Welch and has given birth to the moniker "grainbelt rock."

Tweedy went on to form Wilco (whose recent sophomore effort "Being There" got four stars from Rolling Stone) with Tupelo's touring unit. Farrar started Son Volt by recruiting Minneapolis brothers Jim (bass) and Dave Boquist (guitar, banjo, lap and pedal steel). Heidorn, who left Uncle Tupelo in 1992 to devote his time to his wife and child, reunited with Farrar to fill in on drums.

Thus, Farrar and Heidorn's second journey into Carbondale to play with Son Volt at Shryock Auditorium Tuesday comes under a drastically different set of circumstances.

Instead of being an unknown, unestablished act playing a single gig at a small bar, Son Volt is nearing the end of an 18-month tour in support of its debut album "Trace" (Wamer Bros.), which has now sold about 150,000 copies. In addition to club shows, the band also played on the H.O.R.D.E. tour and Farm Aid earlier this year, an experience that went better than Heidorn expected it to.

"I thought we wouldn't fit in that well with the other bands," Heidorn said of the other acts on the H.O.R.D.E. tour like Rusted Root and Lenny Kravitz. "But in all honesty, the bands have treated us great, and the crowds were fantastic."

That really should not be surprising, considering the acclaim "Trace" has received from the press and the band's musical peers. Besides nabbing the No. 9 slot in Rolling Stone's top 10 albums of 1995, "Trace" also made its way onto the best-of lists of a diverse group of musicians including Juliana Hatfield, Mac McCaughan of Superchunk and members of Hootie and the Blowfish.

Son Volt's songs are difficult to categorize beyond country-rock, although they should not be lumped with acts like .38 Special. It is often perceived as an "alternative" band and has been interviewed on MTV's "120 Minutes." But the band also showed it has a strong foothold in country music as it took a day off in Austin, Texas, earlier this week to record a show for PBS's "Austin City Limits." Son Volt's set consists of shifts between fragile, folksy numbers that center on Farrar's Southern Illinois-meets-Louisiana voice and louder, rocking songs which, unlike Uncle Tupelo, owe more to Creedence Clearwater Revival than Black Flag but still retain some punk overtones. Many fans say this is a result of Farrar simply growing older.

Heidorn said the set will include "about a half-dozen new songs" from an album the band recorded during breaks from the tour. That album, which Heidorn says is "similar to but still different" from "Trace," is slated for a March 1997 release.

Don't expect a lot of dancing around or craziness from Son Volt, however. Farrar has a reputation for being a staid and unemotional performer paying more attention to craft than showmanship. He seldom says more to a crowd than "thanks."

Heidorn confirmed this when asked about the funniest joke he ever heard Farrar tell. "I don't really hear jokes from Jay," he laughed. "I think it's funny when he talks at all."

CONFESSIONS ANYONE?

"Sleepers" director Barry Levinson has stirred emotions not seen in the Catholic community since the release of "The Last Temptation of Christ."

The cause of all the clucking is the character of Father Bobby, played by none other than Robert De Niro. Father Bobby is the resident priest of Hell's Kitchen, a neighborhood on the west side of New York, where he looks over all the people, including four young friends around whom the story revolves.

The story by Lorenzo Carcaterra has been attacked on all sides. Many including the Catholic Church claim that the story is pure fiction and that most of the "facts" in the movie are invented.

All movies are a form of fiction. Those that claim to be based on fact are more likely to offend, but they only are "based" on fact and are not the word of God.

The sad part about all this arguing is that it overshadows a movie that only works stylistically. The story is weak at best and hangs on the talents of several of the big-name actors who headline "Sleepers."

The strong performances of De Niro and Dustin Hoffman save "Sleepers" from near disaster by pulling the film through its shaky story development.

"Sleepers" is the story of four boys who steal a hot dog vendor's cart as a prank and end up crushing a man as the cart rolls down a set of subway steps. The boys are convicted and are sent to a reformatory where they are sexually assaulted and beaten by the guards, including Nokes (Kevin Bacon).

If Levinson would have ended his star-packed movie there; he would have made a much better film. After the first hour of the movie, the plot begins to lose all impact. The interesting characters of the boys are taken over by big-name actors, which instantly turns them into cardboard cutouts.

This is not the failure of the actors. It is Levinson's failure because he allows the interesting tale of abuse to turn into a mindless revenge movie. It is almost as if he loses sight of all the work that has been put into constructing the boys' world.

Not only does he lose his interesting characters, but he also lets the setting of Hell's Kitchen fade away and become a backdrop for the ever-present courtroom.

IAN MILLER'S VIDEO DELUXE: PICK OF THE WEEK

Now here is a priest that the church would really have a fit over.

Charles Laughton paints a masterful picture of terror in the classic, "The Night of the Hunter."

Robert Mitchum stars as the homicidal preacher in search of two children who are hiding their father's stolen money.

"The Night of the Hunter" is beautifully photographed in the Impressionist style of Stanley Cortez ("The Magnificent Ambersons"). Mitchum gives one of his best performances on screen in the tradition of his performances in movies like "Cape Fear" and "Home from the Hill."

AC/DC
Highway to Hell
Atlantic Records, 1979

While "Highway to Hell" is famous for its classic title track, the entire album is a heavy-hitting compilation of juvenile hedonism that pumps the listener full of adrenaline and leaves him or her in awe at the serpentine vocals of the late Bon Scott and the electricity of Angus Young's guitar solos.

The sexually suggestive titles are part of the fun of the album, with "Girls Got Rhythm," "Touch Too Much," "Beating Around the Bush" and "Get It Hot," all cleverly and intentionally sophomorically written.

"Walk All Over You" has a slightly slower beat but remains an ultra-heavy tune. "Shot Down in Flames" is a humorous tale of constant rejection of a guy with lousy pick-up lines and moves.

The crimson imagery of "If You Want Blood (You Got It)," which comments on the sacrifices made for everyday living, is particularly vivid, with lines such as "Blood on the streets; blood on the rocks, blood in the gutter, every last drop." It is lyrical excess like this that makes this album great.

The album ends with a tremendous blues song, "Night Prowler." A rumor even existed that claimed "Night Prowler" was responsible for an outbreak of evening and late-night attacks in the United States.

Of course, this was nothing compared to outrage at the apparent brazen defiance of all things good and proper for which AC/DC seemed to stand.

In years since, though, the album has come to stand for young, male recklessness and freewheeling, with good memories of good times as the end result.

BR5-49
BR5-49
Arista Records
1996

In an age where country music is sickeningly and strictly commercial, BR5-49 has tossed caution — or possible success — to the wind and has recorded a CD that is brimming with heart and soul.

Only two songs seem like silly, almost brainless tunes, while the rest of the music shines. The addition of a scratchy sound at the beginning and end of the CD gives the impression of an analog recording. The music does have a consistently warm tone, even through the melancholy laments "Lifetime to Prove" and "Hickory Wind."

In fact, "Hickory Wind" probably is the most commercially viable song featured, though "Chains of This Town" could rival it with its catchy, Jimmy Buffet meets Jay and the Americans sound.

Frogpond
Count to Ten
Tristar Music
1996

If Nirvana was all female and sucked, the group would be Frogpond.

Actually, most of the music is not bad at all; it is the lack of poetic, deep, philosophical, socially relevant lyrics that drag this band down.

Though lyrical shallowness can be irrelevant if the music really rocks, e.g. Presidents of the U.S.A.'s "Peaches," here the music seems like it is combined with a 5-year-old prodigy's writing style. The opening track "Talk to Me" is too whiny, and "Even Now" is almost entirely composed of the same line: "Even now I don't know why I (you) try."

"Trust?" is the only song where Frogpond's musical style is enhanced by simplistic lyrics. "Pretty Song," is the token soft, retrospective song and sadly, the best track on the album.

Tony Toni Tone
House of Music
Mercury Records
1996

This release is pleasantly surprising with its songs that go back to the days of Otis Redding and Percy Sledge.

Though there are run-of-the-mill, hip-hop and R & B sounding tunes that musically are no different than many songs on the market, three tunes stand out as brilliantly original.

"Thinking of You" has a true vintage sound and is a great intro song for the CD.

The soul sound of "Still a Man" is pleasant, but the best song is "Don't Fall in Love," which actually has a country-type sound reminiscent of '70s honky-tonk music.

If softer music is your style, this is worth checking out.

Variety of sounds abound at Smilin' Jacks

By TRAVIS DeNEAL

Big name musical acts from all genres could be swinging by Carbondale soon to shred tunes at the newly renovated Smilin' Jack's nightclub.

"Most bigger-name acts are passing through the area, and it's simply a matter of getting them to reroute their tours through Carbondale," Smilin' Jack's Manager Todd Lewis said.

Smilin' Jack's, 605 E. Grand Ave., is under the new ownership of Lee Hartsfield and is located in the same building that housed Detours, which closed in September.

For the 21-plus crowd, Smilin' Jack's will be a musicopia, with a different genre featured at every show. Lewis said there will be no catering to one particular music crowd.

"We're going to be featuring every kind of music from alternative to rap to country," he said. "We want to expose people to all sorts of music and literally hit them with everything."

For instance, Inter-galactic Mack and the Extra-Terrestrial Brothaz, a funk band from St. Louis performed last Friday; Head East will be featured Nov.

23, and Biohazard will appear toward the end of the month. As big as...

under 21 crowd will be unable to enter to see any live acts, but Lewis said the club is not ruling out the inclusion of those under legal drinking age.

"We're not doing it yet, but we're checking into it," he said. "We don't want to have any underage violations. And if underage people are in here, the temptation would probably be too great."

Lewis said the capacity of the nightclub, which can hold 990 patrons, will allow it to entice large crowds to interest more popular touring groups.

"Our capacity is a definite advantage," he said. "Other places can't bring in a big band and have the capacity to make it profitable."

"Big-name entertainment will pull in enough customers to keep Smilin' Jack's financially sound," Lewis said. "It is a gamble, but we're willing to gamble," he said. "Big bands may not mean a packed house, but we're more interested in customers coming out here and having a good time."

Live acts will not be the only big attraction of the club. Cigar tastings are planned, Lewis said, and the possibility of other such events like wine tastings exist.

"It will not be a steady business, but we're looking for people to come here who normally wouldn't," he said.

In addition, Lewis plans for a special beer night each week that will feature either an imported beer or a microbrew.

The atmosphere is significantly different from the crowded, dance-floor atmosphere of Detours, Lewis said.

"It's much more relaxed," he said. "People had been trashing the place before, and we don't want that. We want people to come here and have a

Sex in the Story By Dustin Coleman

Jason, an SIUC senior in English from Marion, says that trouble with women, fear of AIDS and not enough time to search for a relationship are the reasons he uses cyberporn as a release. He says he is busy with work, school and does not want to take the time for a relationship.

"I do not want to go through starting a relationship," he said. "I want casual sex without disease and commitments."

Jason has entered the arena of 21st century sex where ever increasing HIV and AIDS cases, home HIV tests, morning after pills and cyberporn — pornography on the Internet — instead of lovers are creating a realm surrounding sex like no other generation has seen.

AIDS

With an increase in the number of those infected with AIDS, the disease is at the forefront of issues dealing with sex. Along those lines, HIV home tests give an anonymous option to those who wish to be tested. But the test has been criticized by some who think it diminishes an accurate account of those with the disease.

Presently, the major issues involving HIV and AIDS are having people and practitioners realize the disease is becoming more of a chronic rather than an infectious disease. Mark Kittleson, an SIUC professor in health education and recreation, said.

Granted, it is still an infectious disease, Kittleson said. But he said with medications and treatments becoming more effective, the fight against AIDS is seeing people living longer with the disease.

But even with the increasing longevity factor, the numbers of HIV/AIDS cases are increasing.

The Total Number of AIDS cases in Illinois through December 1995 was 16,411. Missouri totalled 6,405 and Indiana reported 3,832.

In this region, which includes 27 counties in Southern and Southeast Illinois, there were 42 new AIDS cases reported in the past year. The five-year average of reported new cases is 19 per year, according to Jackson County Health Department records.

There were 30 new HIV cases in the region in the past year. The 5-year average was 48 per year.

Kittleson said numbers do express some aspects of the seriousness of the disease but said people must be careful when looking at these numbers.

"The numbers don't show the tremendous amount of stress, soul searching, etc., that go with them," he said. "People who have HIV not only have to deal with the disease but also hatred, bigotry, misunderstanding and perhaps the loss of their loved ones."

Kittleson also said looking at the numbers of adolescents infected by the disease takes a lot of understanding beyond the actual statistics.

There is a more cavalier approach to sex these days, Kittleson said, and people are having sex at much younger ages. Kittleson said, somehow, many adolescents feel alienated by society, and sex is a way of gaining some kind of comfort.

"In many ways, we're asking them to grow up too quick," he said. "Perhaps we need to allow the children and young adolescents an opportunity to be children."

Health

Unfortunately, the fight against AIDS is focusing more on infection rather than prevention, Kittleson said. Four percent of the effort is in prevention, and 96 percent is after the fact, he said.

But public health officials are doing a great job, considering they have little operating funds, no community support and no support from their supervisors or from parents of those infected, Kittleson said.

But he said Jackson County is an exception. "Jackson County Health Department is an exception," Kittleson said. "The health education efforts are strongly supported by its administrator and by its board. But Jackson County Health Department is an exception to the area."

SIUC is also doing more than most. The University has a very active wellness center and health services has a well-trained staff, Kittleson said.

Also, SIUC has incorporated a general health course into its core curriculum and has been wise to keep such sections small, allowing students to get personal attention toward some very personal information, he said.

The course, HED 101, spends time reviewing Sexually Transmitted Diseases, AIDS and other topics.

"It's a great course, and we're very fortunate to have our graduate students teach them, because they (graduate assistants) do a nice job relating to the students," Kittleson said.

Another good trait at SIUC concerning AIDS and HIV is the testing process on campus. Desiree Mills, coordinator of Student Health Programs, said.

This process includes pre-test counseling, which is an information discussion session between the patient and a Wellness Center staff member.

The person then goes to Health Services to have a blood sample drawn. The results come back in three to five days. If the patient is negative, there is counseling available, including a prevention plan.

If the test comes back positive, there is extensive counseling available that helps the patient live with the disease.

The test is confidential but not anonymous. SIUC is mandated by law to report the demographics of the patient to the local health department.

This is why home HIV tests are harmful to demographic studies of the number of HIV/AIDS infected people, Mills said.

Though the home tests are anonymous and give a sense of privacy to the tester, this anonymity prevents any demographic information from being gained from infected people.

"There is no face-to-face contact or counseling information giving from one person to another," Mills said. "I think it is important that situations like this be dealt with on a personal level."

Mills also said that there may be a chance that the test may not be taken properly, therefore giving an incorrect response.

However, Mills said she does not think that the home tests will overtake any kind of health service testing like the one available at century

21st

Abortion

SIUC. She said home tests cost a considerable amount of money ($50 in some cases), and there is no personal contact with counselors.

But Mills said it is good that there is another outlet for testing.

Another controversial hotspot is the abortion pill RU 486. The pill, developed in 1982, has been widely used in France and in China since the mid 1980s. On Sept. 18, The Food and Drug Administration announced it was ready to approve the pill.

The approval was conditional pending further information on how the drug will be labeled and manufactured. Final approval will not be granted until this information is provided to the FDA.

Like the issue of abortion itself, the pill has raised the eyebrows of pro-lifers and has been praised by many pro-choicers.

The pro-lifers' concerns are that it is not only a means of abortion, but it is a more accessible means. They fear that the number of abortions in the United States, nearly 1.5 million each year according to The National Right to Life Committee, would increase drastically because of the pill.

Those on the pro-choice side commend the approval and say the pill is a safe, non-surgical option for those who want an abortion.

In a Sept. 25 Daily Egyptian article, Mills said she did not think the pill poses any real health concerns and that she does not think women will abuse the pill.

She said that there have been no signs of women abusing the morning after pill, which is a series of pills women take the night after having unprotected sex.

Sex is the leading cause of long people 15 to 24. I contact ted for 65 of reported ses in 1995 gives women alternatives as far as rights to choose," Mills said.

The other end of the spectrum also has strong opinions of the pill.

Don Wooters, director of the Christian Campus Ministry, said in the same article that the abortion pill is wrong and should not be allowed in the United States.

"I think it's a mistake, and abortion is morally wrong in the first place," he said. "There has not been enough testing to approve it anyway."

"The pill makes it more convenient and accessible."

And as the means for abortion becomes more accessible, so does another facet of sex in the '90s.

Cyberporn

The proliferation of cyberporn could be attributed to guilt-free access at home or in the computer lab, without facing others in a bookstore or video-rental store.

It also can be attributed to its function. It is not like reading a magazine. The Internet brings the other media together. The chat rooms can impersonate a relationship, coupled with the visual photographs or video feeds of some pages.

SIUC provides free software for accessing e-mail and the Internet from homes or dorm rooms. These computers dial up the SIUC server and surf the Web. Accessing a page of pornography for a 21st century sexual relationship is a snap.

Pornography does exist through other mediums such as videos, books, cable television, telephones, telescopes and magazines, but it has become very popular and lucrative online.

The popularity of cyberporn can be tracked through services like WebCounter, which provides counters that calculate the visits, "hits," to a Web page. The service also publishes lists of the pages with the greatest amount of hits.

One of the Webmasters from WebCounter wrote in an e-mail message, "I believe the sheer volume shows what is popular, but that does not mean that is all that the Internet is used for."

Certainly not, but there is too little doubt as to the popularity of porn on the Internet given Web counter records.

In the current top six sites with WebCounter, four contain pornography. One site features SIUC's very own one-time student Jenny McCarthy, who is now a star on MTV.

The top site does not feature McCarthy or any pornography and received 10,715 hits per day.

However, this list excludes sites that are commercial or exclusively pornographic sites. Persian Kitty's Adult Sites, which links to more than 600 porn sites, receives 180,990 hits per day. It has amassed 42 million hits since Jan. 1.

Also according to WebCounter, a pay site run by a stripper has a members-only section and claims to receive 1.5 million hits per day and has generated $1 million dollars in ad sales.

So how does one find love in the down-load?

"I like to surf the Web for porn and chat rooms," Jason, the SIUC student who uses cyberporn instead of a relationship, said. "I have met some interesting women."

He admits that he is not sure those he "meets" in chat rooms are actually women, but he enjoys the game nonetheless.

"Really, I like the chat rooms because they are exciting," he said. "Surfing for pictures afterwards is a visualization of the game."

He said that he stays disease, stress and rejection free.

"I go to the bars and watch people try to find someone," he said. "I do not have the time for a relationship, and I am afraid of AIDS. Cyberporn cuts to the chase — the adrenaline... the sex."

SIUC Information Technology does not restrict content coming into its servers by blocking sites but does prohibit pornography published on its own pages.

Tony Kerber, a data processing specialist for Information Technology, said there are no plans to restrict the accessibility of pornography on the World Wide Web through the SIUC servers. Given that 98.9 percent of those who view pornography are men, the 21st century sex medium may become a solo-single scene.

More men like Jason are bound to log on to chat rooms talking with "women" and downloading glossy online photos of love, avoiding any stress or disease and the inconvenience of a relationship and feelings.

Sex as we know it is evolving. The spread of AIDS, the rise of cyberporn, the availability of abortion pills and home AIDS/HIV tests offers new choices for the game of sex. One thing is consistent; there always will be sex. It is how we adapt to the changes that will take us into sex in the 21st century.

There were 42 new cases of AIDS in Region 5 of Illinois which includes 27 counties in Southern and Southeast Illinois

DOUBLE-EGGED WORD

TWO PERFORMANCES BY SPEECH COMMUNICATION Ph.D. students will be performed starting tonight at Kleinau Theatre in the Communications Building.

The first performance, "Confrontation Without Alienation" is an original work by Darja Charlesworth. The performance focuses on the life and legacy of an often overlooked suffragist the Rev. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw. Charlesworth wrote and will perform the production.

The second performance "Grisworld" is an original work by Jackson Miller. The work is based on the tales and poems of Edgar Allen Poe, and the insanity of an individual whose life becomes immersed in Poe's fiction.

Kleinau Theatre is located on the 2nd floor of the Communications Building. Admission is $4 for adults and $2 for students with ID. Tickets can be reserved by calling 453-2291 or 453-5618. Reserved tickets are held until 7:45 the evening of the performance.

OPERA-TION

THE STUDENT CENTER SPECIAL PROGRAMS AND Marjorie Lawrence Opera Theater will collaborate to bring Richard Rodgers' and Oscar Hammerstein's "Allegro" to SIUC.

This is the third time the two have teamed up to bring a play to SIUC.

The production follows the lead character Joe Taylor from his birth until he becomes a middle-aged man. Taylor inevitably, through trial and error, tries to reach the American Dream.

The cast is made up of SIUC music and theater students.

The production is this Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in Student Center Ballroom D.

Tickets are $5 for students and $6 for the general public and are available at the Student Center Ticket Office. Tickets also are available at the door.

BLOW HARD

THE STUDENT CENTER PROGRAMMING COUNCIL will show the film "400 Blows", this Sunday and Monday as part of its international film series.

The film follows a young Parisian who becomes a small-time criminal in reaction to the actions of his parents. The film is directed by famous French filmmaker Francois Truffaut.

The film is the first of Truffaut's autobiographical series on Antoine Doinel.

The film will run at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. both nights. Admission is $1.

WHEN HORSES FLY!!

BACK BY POPULAR DEMAND, RANDY CROUCH AND Flyin' Horse will once again grace the area with their psychodelic-folk, bluegrass-blues sound.

Originally from Tehlequah, Okla., the band started playing Carbondale earlier this year and has consistently packed the house.

Crouch plays covers including "All Along the Watchtower," "Day Tripper" and the Flintstones theme song. Crouch also plays many original songs.

Crouch will play Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave., tonight. Cover is $3. Show starts at 10 p.m.

SHAKING ITS STUFF

THE SHACKSHAKERS, A BAND FROM NASHVILLE, Tenn., will play Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave. Friday. The band, whose music is described as rockabilly, has been touring the Midwest. Its performance Friday will be one of several the band has performed in Carbondale this year. The show starts at 10 p.m. There is no opening band. Cover charge is $3.

Just to mention

Ex-Smashing Pumpkins drummer Jimmy Chamberlin has joined somewhat of a supergroup called the Last Hard Men. The band consists of the Breeder's Kelly Deal, Skid Row's Sebastian Bach, and the Frogs' Jimmy Flemion. Everclear, Joey Ramone, the Posies, the Nixons and Refreshments will all grace the new Cheap Trick tribute album due out in late January. Nick Cave has told MTV Europe "no way" to the invitation to be involved in its music awards because he is not into competition with other musicians. Wayne's World producer Penelope Spheeris is doing a movie called "Flashbacks" based on the life of the late LSD guru Timothy Leary. Danny Aiello has been signed to play the lead role in the CBS miniseries "The Last Don". Aiello will earn a seven-figure paycheck for the part which Marlon Brando considered taking. Best-selling author Anne Rice has agreed to develop a one-hour drama for CBS for the 1997-98 season. A ju. Tuesday convicted a Jenny Jones talk show guest of second-degree murder for killing a gay man who revealed he had a crush on him during a taping of her program. And Fergie may have pissed off the British, but she may be loved in America if she gets a job she is interviewing for with Weight Watchers.

Gallery provides outlet for student artists

By LISA M. PANGBURN

When Dena Burnett finished her fifth painting, she wanted to display her works so she could get feedback from fellow art students and other peers. She found a student-run gallery that had an inexpensive display fee.

The Vergette Gallery, located in the Allyn Building, has been around for more than 25 years. It is dedicated in memory of Nicholas Vergette, a long-time SIUC art professor.

Burnett, a senior in art and design from Urbana, said she has used the Vergette twice to display different pieces.

"It's nice to be able to display your work on campus," she said. "I personally enjoy it because when I display here (the Vergette), get feedback from professors as well as students. It's a good feeling when someone in one of your classes, who you think is exceptionally good, comments on one of your pieces."

One of Burnett's peers is co-director of the gallery.

Regan Gunn, a senior in art and design from Moline, said she puts an enormous amount of time and effort into the Vergette but finds it very fulfilling.

"I don't get paid for my time, but every second is worth it," she said. "The best part of being a director is the people I get to meet and discuss what I love with so many good artists."

Doing what Gunn loves comes with other responsibilities that must be taken care of to run a complete gallery, she said.

"I pick up the applications of people who want to display, and I also take care of the keys," she said. "The artists can pick up the keys from myself or the other director on Saturdays or prearranged times. It is also up to the artist to have the gallery back to normal and have everything neatly put together after they are finished."

Gunn said one of the reasons she donates her time to the gallery is so she can help people learn how to display.

"Some people never knew how to get an exhibit, and I think every artist should try to display some of their work," she said.

Joyce Jolif, an SIUC art adviser, said doing exhibitions is an excellent way for students to receive constructive criticism.

"Every artist needs to hear opinions of their work," she said.

"It is extremely important to get feedback on your art, and what better way to do it than display it at your own school?"

Jolif said the directors have the final say and confirmation on all proposed exhibition dates.

"This is pretty much a student-run gallery," she said.

"The students who display their art must fill any holes in the walls and paint over the spackling. They have to pay a ($10) fee, and if the gallery is left a mess, another $10 will be charged to the bursar bill."

Burnett said she has never had a problem with being charged because she respects the gallery and what it has to offer.

"The Vergette is something that I can prosper from," she said.

"In fact, it is something that everyone can prosper from."

Internet educates web users about sex

By BRIAN T. SUTTON

Sex these days takes responsibility and education. Few take the time to learn about sexually transmitted diseases, such as the fact that one-fifth of the American population carries a STD. So log on and educate yourself.

<http://www.unspeakable.com/>
Unspeakable is about creating discourse for those who do not know as much as they should about STDs.

The site includes a risk profiler test that analyzes your lifestyle for risk and a STD clinic locator.

<http://www.webcom.com/~cps/jey/jey.html>

The Just Say Yes page takes a positive attitude about sex and believes in straightforward education — homosexual, straight or bisexual.

They use language most of you would use if your mother was not around, and they have no apologies about it.

Faculty help with dorm life

By Dave Armstrong
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Seeing faculty members in a lecture hall is the closest most students ever get to their professors, but having them two doors down in their residence hall is becoming a common sight for students in Thompson Point.

Chris Bohnemeier, an undecided sophomore from O'Fallon, said he has learned that faculty and student relationships are an important part of resident life at Thompson Point—thanks to his hall's "adopted" faculty member.

Bohneimeier is a resident in a building participating in the Faculty Associates Program which pairs a faculty member with each building in Thompson Point in an effort to build a stronger faculty-student relationship.

Tony Earls, Thompson Point housing coordinator, said Thompson Point's motto, "Dedicated to the Fusion of Living and Learning," was the original principle that administrators based Thompson Point on.

When Thompson Point was built, faculty lived with students in what are now the head resident apartments. The basement area served as a classroom.

"There has always been a desire to get the faculty more involved with students..."

Tony Earls,
Thompson Point
housing coordinator

Because of security concerns raised in the late '60s, this idea had to be abandoned.

Earls said he was given the opportunity to initiate a similar program at the beginning of this year.

"There has always been a desire to get the faculty more involved with students," so Ed Jones (director of University Housing) asked me to try this idea," Earls said. "Because we are just working the program out as we go along, we have decided to simply stress the relationship between faculty and students itself."

While in the halls, nine faculty members either visit with the staff and students and offer advice, present workshops or get together for movies.

Some students said the extra friend they find in faculty members is helpful to them.

Bohneimeier, who met his faculty associate the first day of school, said he believes having a faculty presence in the residence halls helps establish relations between students and faculty.

"There always has to be a relationship between students and faculty," Bohnemeier said. "This program is helping us build one."

Jack Parker, dean of the College of Science and faculty associate for Felts Hall, said the program not only benefits students, but faculty as well.

"I am mainly an administrator, so I have been getting further and further away from the students," Parker said. "This helps me get back into the mix. I try to get involved in hall activities events, because it is nice for students to know faculty besides their teachers."

Kim McEvers, a sophomore in education from Pawnee, said the faculty presence in the residence halls should be increased.

"We haven't been able to spend enough time with our faculty member," McEvers said. "She put on a cool program about feminism for us, and a lot of residents were there. I know it may be hard to find the time, but if she came back and did other programs, it would be really great."

trade from Chicago, told the Latino students at Cobden that they had an advantage over most students because if they stay in school, they will know two languages.

"If you are educated, you are an asset to your race," Cortes said. "By being bilingual, you are twice as dangerous to anyone who wants to hold you down."

Cortes said the Hispanic Student Council was there to help the students work through their problems.

"We want to motivate the children to overcome their problems with school and keep their minds focused," Cortes said. "We want to prevent them from dropping out."

Tomas said one problem the Latinos in Cobden face is lack of money.

One of the SIUC students talked in Spanish to the group about how to get financial aid.

Tomas said when he found out some of the financial aid opportunities available at universities, such as SIUC, he realized that he could go to college.

Some students at Cobden said they did not see the need to try hard in school until the Tuesday presentation.

Samuel Correa, a high school freshman, said he now has motivation to work in school.

"I think it is great there are people out there who have feelings for us and want to help us," Correa said. "I will try to do better in school and work harder."

Other Hispanic students said they already planned to go college before the Tuesday presentation, but now are more determined to go after listening to the Hispanic college students.

Laura Ramos, a seventh grade student, said she has wanted to go to college since she was in the fourth grade.

"I have wanted to go to college for a long time," Ramos said. "I want to try to become a lawyer."

Ramos said the presentation gave hope to some of the students that they could go to college. She said seeing fellow Latinos was encouraging.

Mary Montavon, the coordinator of migrant bilinguals for the Cobden school district, said having Latino college students visit the school was effective in helping the students think about college as an option for their future.

"There are tremendous numbers of Hispanics throughout the U.S. who do not finish school," Montavon said. "To see college students just like them come and speak will make some of them think, 'Maybe we can do that, too.'" counting problems in some areas coupled with the closeness of the race warrant the recount.

A ballot counting computer in Perry County malfunctioned on the Nov. 5 election night, and some of the ballots that were not being registered by the computer had to be repunched manually before they could be read by the computer, Perry County Clerk Don Hirsch said.

Brown, an SIUC political science lecturer, carried Perry County with 4,988 votes to Luechtefeld's 4,876 votes as well as winning Jackson, Randolph and Union counties.

If a recount produces a different result from the original count, the contesting candidate must file an election contest with the Illinois Senate, which then would decide the outcome.

Luechtefeld said he believes the clerks in the seven counties making up the district did a good job making sure the ballots were counted accurately.

"I don't believe (the recount) will change the outcome," he said. "The county clerks in this district have a history of integrity."

Luechtefeld said he is not in a position to say why Brown would ask for a recount.

"It's up to the candidate," he said.

USG considering student party patrol

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

When the neighbors complain, students who host loud parties soon could receive a warning from another student rather than a ticket from a Carbondale Police officer.

A student party patrol program operating in Champaign is being analyzed by the SIUC Undergraduate Student Government who will decide if a similar program would work in Carbondale.

USG President Troy Alim said Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom wrote him a letter about the program, which uses University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana students to warn party hosts of noise complaints.

Champaign Police Department spokeswoman Rebecca Hall said students are hired by U of I police but work with city police.

"Say we get a loud party call, a complaint from the neighbors," Hall said. "Instead of an officer coming the first time, the student patrols come."

U of I Police Department Sgt. Roy Acree said students give party

"It's a student-to-student confrontation, rather than a big, bad police officer coming to your house telling you to shut your music off."

Roy Acree,
U of I Police Sergeant

hosts information on the city's fines for noise violations.

"If we're called back a second time, the police department comes, and tickets could be issued," Hall said.

Last year, the Champaign patrols warned about 300 houses of complaints. Of those, about 30 houses received a second complaint and a call from police officers. The rest of the parties heeded the warning, a report stated.

Carbondale Police Lt. Steve Odum said the department receives between 1,400 and 1,600 noise complaints per year. The department does not record how many complaints are from parties, as opposed to dogs barking, people shouting or other disturbances, he said.

In 1991, USG defeated a proposal to create and fund a student party patrol because some senators voiced concerns about liability and invasion of privacy.

Alim said the time could be right for the program.

"Recently, some students have been concerned about officers writing tickets for noise and in the process carding students (to check for underage drinking)," he said.

Alim said USG City Affairs Commissioner Charles Lueker is gathering information from people involved in the Champaign program.

Strom said he will reserve comment on the patrol program until USG decides whether or not to pursue it.

Acree said Champaign's party patrol is on call Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. He said it is part of the city's student patrol, a program that sends students to walk people to their cars and perform similar duties.

Acree said the Champaign City Council has been funding the program. Students are paid for their work.

Hall said the student patrols are an asset to the city's police department.

"The program lets us respond to more serious calls without being delayed," she said. "It helps free us up for more serious situations."

Acree said occasionally, party patrollers are greeted by intoxicated patrons who give them a hard time. He said patrollers call the police if that happens.

Nevertheless, Acree said he would recommend the party patrol program to other college towns.

"Actually, it's a really good program," he said. "It's a student-to-student confrontation, rather than a big, bad police officer coming to your house telling you to shut your music off."

Whether or not SIUC students would be paid for patrolling, how students would be selected and other specifics of the proposed Carbondale program have not been decided by USG.

Cause of air collision not determined

The Washington Post

NEW DELHI, India—Indian aviation officials said Wednesday that the world's deadliest midair collision was not caused by problems in the air-traffic control system for New Delhi, but they left alternate explanations to public speculation and a judicial inquiry.

It appeared possible, but unlikely, that there was one survivor among a slightly revised total of 349 passengers and crew members aboard the two planes. A telephone operator at a hospital in Rohtak, a town near the crash site, said a badly burned Indian man was being treated there. But aviation authorities said they doubted anyone aboard the planes had survived.

The U.S. Embassy in New Delhi, India's capital, confirmed that three Americans—two passengers and one crew member—died on the Saudi flight. Their names were being held pending notification of relatives.

Authorities said they had recovered the flight-data recorders from both aircraft and the cockpit voice recorder from the Kazak plane.

based aid, then they shouldn't be paid," Elgin said. "There are a select few who will go into the professional ranks. And as far as a direct stipend for each athlete, I do not support it."

While athletes do bring a large amount of money to the universities, Elgin said there are opportunities for student-athletes to receive financial help.

"There are compelling arguments for modifying the current rules," he said. "But there are many different funds available for student-athletes in need."

Elgin mentioned the NCAA's Special Assistance Fund and Trust Fund as two programs that provide financial help to all students, including student-athletes, based on need.

While Elgin and Herrin disagree on the issue, both agree that paying athletes would not prevent some from moving to the professional ranks before they graduate.

In June's National Basketball Association draft, more underclassmen were drafted and at higher positions than their senior counterparts. Even high school stars, such as Kevin Garnett, Kobe Bryant and Jermaine O'Neal, have skipped the college ranks over the past two years for the millions of dollars awaiting them in the pros.

Herrin said that trend will continue even if the NCAA changes its policy.

"The payments would not be a factor," he said. "If a player can get the big bucks, he'll go get them."

SIUC athletes also are divided on this issue. Junior guard Troy Hudson said he supports paying college athletes.

"I believe college athletes should be paid in some cases because they need to buy clothes and food that other students who have jobs get to buy," Hudson, of Carbondale, said.

Hudson also said that weekend jobs or summer jobs that don't affect an athlete's athletic and academic schedules could be beneficial.

"Students who get jobs have some spending money," he said. "I think it would be good for athletes to get a weekend job or something to have a little extra money."

Hudson's teammate, forward Monte Jenkins, a sophomore from Rock Island, said he supports the NCAA's rule that bans paying college athletes. Jenkins said financial aid, such as the Pell Grant, provides needy student-athletes with some extra money.

"If a family is financially needy, the Pell Grant can give them extra money each semester," Jenkins said. "So they really shouldn't need to be paid."

Yet Hudson said he thinks that paying college athletes would make a big difference in preventing players from leaving school early to enter the pros.

"Most of the players who leave early leave because of financial need," he said. "If they start paying college players, then you'll start to see more athletes staying in school for four years."

Elgin, however, agreed with Herrin and said that a small payment would not be enough to keep talented athletes in college.

"Athletes today can get millions of dollars in the pros," he said. "Those individuals would not be satisfied with a small payment and would try to move on to the next level."

Jenkins said that most of the top prospects would continue to leave early for the millions of dollars awaiting them in the pros.

"Most of the players would be happy if they changed the rules," Jenkins said. "But I think they'll still leave early for the big bucks."

Illinois State University and will join sisters Jenny and Amy as the third Niebrugge to play college basketball.

Scott stated that Niebrugge "is a talented player who can play inside or out."

Smith, a 5-foot-9-inch forward, averaged 26 points, 11 rebounds and six assists per game in leading Carlyle High School to the state championship. Smith, who chose SIUC over the University of Missouri and Illinois State University, is also one of the early favorites for the state's "Miss Basketball" after finishing fourth in the balloting last season.

"Courtney may be the single most significant recruit we have signed in years because of the impact she can have on our program," Scott stated.

Traylor, a 5-foot-8-inch guard, averaged 10 points, six rebounds and three steals per game for Regina High School. Traylor, who is a key player on one of Michigan's premier basketball programs, will become the first Michigan player to join one of Scott's squads.

"Tiffany is an athletic, talented point guard who has great potential for us," Scott stated. "She is an exciting player who will add quickness and defensive prowess to the point guard position."

Scott, who also stated she wants to sign one more player in the near future, stated that this recruiting class brings talent and character to the SIUC program.

"These athletes are quality players, but better yet, are quality people who are all good students," she stated. "They will make us proud on the floor, in the classroom and in the community."

FOOTBALL

Redskins' Blanton cool under pressure

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Washington Redskins special teams coach Pete Rodriguez first began to believe kicker Scott Blanton had the right leg and the right stuff to perform in the National Football League in the summer of 1995.

"We had three kickers in camp," Rodriguez said yesterday. "A kid from North Carolina State (Steve Videtic) who hadn't missed a kick inside 40 yards his last two years of college, and Chip Lohmiller. Every time we had a kicking contest, Scott won. You're a rookie and you're fighting for a job. You're going against a guy like Lohmiller who's been to the Pro Bowl, and every time you go head-to-head with him, you out-kick him. That told me something."

Fast forward to last Sunday at RFK Stadium. For the first time as a pro, Blanton was faced with having to make a game-winning field goal, in overtime, from 38 yards out. The Arizona Cardinals had even called time out to make Blanton think just a little harder about what he had to do.

Blanton walked over to the sideline, just as he'd seen Eddie Murray — the veteran he beat out this past summer to win the job — do in similar situations. He wanted to avoid Arizona loudmouths trying to rattle him with obscenities, and he needed to get his head straight before he attempted the kick.

When it finally was time to perform, Blanton did his job. There was the typically perfect snap from center Trevor Matich and the proper hold by quarterback Gus Frerotte, laces away from the kicker, just the right angle when ball hits turf just before foot hits ball.

The kick sailed through the uprights.

"It's good, and I'm hugging Gus," Blanton said. "It's my first big kick under pressure in the NFL. Then I look back and I can hear the Arizona people yelling. They're real excited, they're going 'Yeah! Yeah!' That kind of thing. Then I saw the flag and I walked away saying, 'Please don't be on us, please don't be on us.' It was on us."

Specifically, it was on tight end Scott Galbraith, a 10-yard penalty for holding the outside rush man. Coach Norv Turner said on Monday it was a ticky-tacky call probably ignored 15 out of 20 times by the officials. But that's been little consolation to Galbraith, Blanton or anyone else on the Redskins, particularly after Blanton missed from 10 yards back, and the Cardinals went on to win on Kevin Butler's 32-yarder.

"After I missed, guys came up to me and said, 'Don't worry about it, it's a tough field goal,'" Blanton said. "On Sunday night, your heart is down. It just doesn't feel right. You feel sick. But you have to keep kicking. The biggest thing is we lost the game. What rips me apart is seeing the guys who'd played so hard. If we'd won and I'd been zero for four, I'd have been disappointed in myself, but at least we'd have the win. This one really hurt."

This much seems certain: Blanton is going to have more opportunities, and everyone who knows him believes he's got plenty of winning kicks left in that right leg. As a senior at Oklahoma, he made a 48-yarder with 11 seconds left to beat Syracuse, 29-28. A 39-yarder with 1:38 remaining won the Kansas game that '94 season.

Illinois, Saluki insiders have gone even further, labeling Jones as a "hot-head...who spends too much time jawing at the officials."

No doubt SIUC's third straight loss played a part in that situation.

His one-game suspension against Western Kentucky Nov. 16 progressed from "where was Jones against the Hilltoppers?" to "where has he been all season?"

But given the Salukis' disappointing season, even Jones admits that, at times, he too can lose his cool.

"I guess I've been labeled as a hot-head, but I hate losing more than anything," Jones said. "If I could trade in my receptions this year for the six games we lost, I would do it in a heartbeat."

But criticism, be it from the NFL or the stands, is a matter of opinion and means little to Jones. He heard it at Michigan, he has heard it since he came to SIUC in 1994, and he will hear it long after he sets out for the NFL.

Sixty minutes of football is all Jones has left in his Saluki career as the Dawgs close out their season against Southeast Missouri State Saturday at McAndrew Stadium.

Rest assured Jones will not try anything different this time around. He may not have a stellar performance. He may walk off the field disgusted because he couldn't make the big play. He may even "jaw" with an official.

But rest assured, he will give it 60 minutes because he has attracted the attention of another scout. This time former Saluki Rick Spielman of the Detroit Lions will be in the stands.

So maybe the thing to ponder is not where Jones has been all season, but where he is going.

He's going to the NFL.

overall performance," Chappell said. "But I wish I could have done a little more."

Both athletes said not playing volleyball will leave them with free time they are not used to having.

"It'll be weird to have so much free time," Revoir said.

Both athletes want to teach in the future. Chappell plans to teach children with disabilities and Revoir wants to teach English in high school.

Chappell said it will be hard, but she thinks she will manage to find ways to fill her days.

"I don't know exactly how I'll manage my free time," Chappell said. "But I know I'll have extra time to study."

Locke said although this is their last game in Davies, the seniors still have a lot to hold their heads up about because the team can still go to the tournament.

"It's not over till it's over," she said.

Senior spikers to miss sport, teammates

By L. Bruce Luckett
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Saluki volleyball seniors Becky Chappell and Jodi Revoir are two spikers saddened by the possibility that their SIUC athletic careers may come to a close Saturday night.

Chappell, a defensive specialist, and Revoir, a middle blocker, will embrace the confines of Davies Gym for the final time Saturday as SIUC closes out the regular season with a pair of crucial Missouri Valley Conference games.

But Revoir, an English major from Oakdale, Minn., said she finds solace in knowing that Friday's and Saturday's matches may mean making it to post-season action — provided the spikers fare well against Bradley University Friday and University of Northern Iowa Saturday.

"Saturday night will be hard, but hopefully it won't be our last match," Revoir said. "We'll try to play our best. We want to go out with a bang."

The Salukis, currently in fifth place in the Valley, need to remain inside the top six to make it to the tournament, which begins Nov. 22 at Southwest Missouri State University.

The Salukis are coming off a non-conference win against Western Illinois University Tuesday. The Salukis beat the Westerwinds in five games.

Coach Sonya Locke said she has no greater expectations of her two seniors this weekend because all the players should have been giving their best all season long.

"I don't look for anything out of the ordinary this weekend," she said.

Locke said anyone who cares about the school, the players or the volleyball program will be emotional Saturday.

Revoir and Chappell began their collegiate volleyball careers at SIUC in 1993.

Revoir said she not only will miss the team, but will miss the true friend she has found in Chappell.

"They're (the team) my family, and it almost feels like being cut off from your family," she said. "But I've gone through a whole lot with Becky (Chappell), and I think I'll miss her most of all."

Revoir said she also will miss

Davies Gym and the people who helped make her feel at home at SIUC.

"We really appreciate the fans," she said. "I'll miss all of the people who have supported us over the last four years."

Chappell, a special education major from Huntley, said she has not yet come to terms with the idea of not playing volleyball any more.

"It's kind of sad to think about it, but it hasn't really hit me yet," Chappell said. "It's hard to believe things are actually going to be over."

While Revoir has come to terms with the idea, she said she is not excited with it.

"It's been a long four years, but to know the end is in sight is scary," Revoir said.

This season, Revoir leads the team in service aces with 27 and has had a total of 14 double digit kill matches. Revoir is 11th in career kills for SIUC.

Chappell has 18 total aces and has been one of the most consistent servers for SIUC during her career. Chappell said in looking back on her volleyball career at SIUC, she is pleased.

Jones still NFL-bound despite questionable performances

Saluki senior tight end Damon Jones has caught more criticism this season than he has passes from quarterback Phil Shellhaas.

When New York Giants Pro Scout Ray Walsh left the pressbox during the football Salukis' 26-19 loss to Western Illinois Oct. 19, he simply said Jones, the player who brought the scout there in the first place, "needs to play 60 minutes of football."

What Walsh was referring to was Jones' offensive production this season, which seems to come and go in spurts.

Jones' season began with an 80-yard touchdown against Central Arkansas Aug. 31. He ended the day with 105 yards on three receptions.

Most think he has not done diddly ever since.

After all, he has only managed to add one touchdown since UCA, which has led many to wonder why the NFL has invested so much time and effort into him.

Jones is no fluke. He's fast, agile and strong. He can run, and he can block. Just ask running back Coe Bonner.

But the NFL prospect's output is often measured in terms of receptions.

Through nine games this season, Jones has only 29 receptions for 390 yards. That's good enough for second best on the team.

No, that may not be good enough to match Jones' 597 yards on 35 receptions last season, but his 3.22 receptions per game is good for 10th in the Gateway and only two off the league leader's five-per-game average.

Throwing a pass to a tight end with Jones' speed is like throwing a piece of meat into a lion cage. And coaches around the Gateway keyed in on that from the start. The 80-yarder against UCA proved that.

Keep in mind SIUC's offense wasn't built around Jones; it was geared toward the run, which owes much of its success to Jones.

Jones can throw a good block as quick as anyone.

This season, he spent far more time throwing blocks than catching passes. And that was one force behind Bonner's 1,000-plus yard season.

"It's a credit to the coaches around the league. They have done some adjusting and found a way to isolate me in a game," Jones admits. "If people want to see how many receptions I have, we can go look at the tape."

Yet criticism in other areas is warranted.

Bound for glory: SIUC tight end and NFL hopeful Damon Jones had his biggest game of the year with 105 yards on three catches against University of Central Arkansas Aug. 31. Jones and the rest of the Saluki seniors will conclude their college careers against Southeast Missouri State at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at McAndrew Stadium.

Salukis ink four in early signing

By Ryan Keith
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Thanks to successful results during the NCAA Early Signing Period, the SIUC women's basketball program is solid up to the year 2000, Coach Cindy Scott stated.

Scott announced the signing of national-letters-of-intent by four solid high school seniors Wednesday, a Sports Information press release stated.

"I cannot tell you how excited we are, as this is an outstanding recruiting class,"

Scott stated in the report. "Our program is solid for the next four years. We could not have had a better recruiting class."

The Salukis inked Terica Hathaway from Providence, Ky.; Maria Niebrugge from Teutopolis; Courtney Smith from Carlyle; and Tiffany Traylor from Detroit on the first day of the NCAA's Early Signing Period.

Hathaway, a 5-foot-11-inch guard, averaged 29.1 points per game and 16.0 rebounds per game and earned first-team all-state honors for Providence High School as a junior.

Hathaway, who also earned all-state honors in track and field, scored 56 points in one game last year for the fourth highest total in Kentucky prep history.

"I consider her the steal of the recruiting class," Scott stated. "We were lucky to sign her, as Hathaway is a talented athletic guard who can be a big-time player for us."

Niebrugge, a 6-foot forward, averaged 17 ppg and 10 rpg for Teutopolis High School as a junior. Niebrugge, who also helped Teutopolis win the 1995 Class A State Championship, chose SIUC over

Controversy over paying athletes rages on

By Ryan Keith
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As college athletics grow and continue to bring large financial gains to universities and corporate sponsors, the debate over paying college athletes persists.

Although the controversy grows between supporters and opponents across the country, the college athletics' governing body has not acted on the matter.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has a tight set of rules that must be followed to maintain players' amateur status. Those rules prohibit, among other things, payments to student-athletes.

But Saluki Men's Basketball Coach Rich Herrin said that paying college athletes who have financial needs is a different story.

"I think they should look at the need of the player," Herrin said. "You can't just give every player money, but you should look at it on an individual level."

Under NCAA rules, any player under scholarship is forbidden to have a job. Yet Herrin said he thinks the NCAA will revise its rules in the future.

"I think they will (revise the rules) as far as needs of the players go," Herrin said. "They need to revise the rules so that players who need help can get it."

Missouri Valley Conference Commissioner Doug Elgin disagreed with Herrin's view and said athletes are provided with several financial options.

"If you look at the hundreds of millions of dollars that are available through grant-

Salukis sign CCHS forward Josh Cross

The Saluki men's basketball team signed Carbondale High School forward Josh Cross to open the NCAA's Early Signing Period Wednesday.

Cross, a 6-foot-4-inch senior, averaged 9.7 points and 11.5 rebounds per game last season for the Terriers. Cross will follow brothers Dan (University of Florida) and Joe (Florida International University) into the college ranks. Cross, who chose SIUC over the University of Loyola-Chicago, said Indiana University and Northwestern University also showed interest in him.

Saluki Coach Rich Herrin could not be reached for comment Wednesday.
